message from the president...

HI ATAO….

Our annual conference is fast approaching. It is scheduled for Saturday, April 6 at the Veterans Administration in the Health Wing, OKC, same as last year. We are very fortunate to have Dr. Madeline Rugh as our keynote speaker! The theme is titled “The Art of Living in the Present. Mindfulness in a Busy World.” Dr. Rugh will also conduct a break out session with a walk through the VA’s new labyrinth. Madeline is a registered art therapist, board certified with a PhD in adult and community education. Her spiritual directions will no doubt add depth and meaning to her presentation.

On April 5, Pat Webb, executive director of the Silence Foundation, will lead “Mindfulness Practice in Art Therapy,” providing new skills for yourself and your clients with practice, art and reflection. It will be at the Rainbow Fleet at 3024 Paeo in OKC. Located in the historic Paseo district, this will be first Friday so the galleries will be open in the evening starting around 6.

LOTS of CEU’s will be available for both days. No better way to collect required CEU’s than attending art therapy offerings!

Joan Phillips has secured a date for us on September 28 for our fall retreat. It will be at Vicki Maenza’s house east of Norman, same as last year. If you missed our retreat last year, here is your chance to experience 32 acres in a restful setting, with a professional and large studio space. It was and will be again an amazing retreat. Vicki prepared a wonderful vegetarian lunch. Pics of last year’s retreat are in this newsletter!

So, please save Sept. 28 on your calendar for our fall retreat. You can check out the conference flyer elsewhere in this newsletter for details on the conference and Friday workshop.

Hope you are having a good enough 2013.

Pam Rice has joined 3 other artists in a jewelry studio and retail space called METALmorphis. It is located at 4817 South Peoria in Tulsa (Brookside area). The hours are sketchy so the store is open by appointment. I would love for anyone to stop by and see it! I am there on Fridays but please call first - 918-381-6234. I will be having an open house in the next couple of months, and will keep you posted! - Pam Rice, ATR, LPC

Art Therapy Discovery Day - March 9th - Emporia State University, Emporia, KS

AATA 2013 Conference half-day course - The Mural Connection: Exploring Attachments through Collaborative Artwork (PS1080)

This course will address the collaborative creation of murals as a treatment modality for restructuring interpersonal skills and attachment approaches. Attendees will participate in an experiential exercise and examples will be given from clinical treatment of adults who are dually-diagnosed with mental illness and chemical dependency.

Advanced Practice Half Day Course, SUNDAY, JUNE 30, 2013, 8:00 am to 11:00 am (3 CECs)
There will be a presentation, followed by collaborative art-making and discussion.

While examples of artwork will be from my work with dually-diagnosed adults, this course will be relevant to a variety of populations, as the main objective is to explore the use of collaborative art-making to address interpersonal skills and attachment approaches. Following a clinical presentation that explores attachment and provides examples of artwork, you will have an opportunity to create a mural, round-robin style, with other attendees. We will then have a discussion about the experience in the context of attachment and its role in treatment.

This course is based on the work created in a weekly Mural Group with adults, as well as my research on attachment styles and their role in treatment. In my work, I have been consistently amazed at the power of collaborative art-making and hope that you will take this opportunity to join me in this exploration! It is an opportunity to explore a meaningful treatment modality, as well as get some ideas for your own practice!

ATAO Fall 2013 Retreat will be held on September 28th at Vicki Maenza's house east of Norman, [same as last year].

Robert Genn Twice-Weekly Letter

Your art in the movies
Recently, a fellow painter phoned to tell me that one of his galleries had asked him to sign a “Motion Picture Exposure Agreement.” From time to time the dealer might rent his work to motion picture productions, take a small fee and give little or nothing to the artist. “It’s good publicity,” said the dealer. I told my friend to go ahead and sign, but to make sure they kept him in the loop ahead of time on each deal.

In my thinking, getting paid is of less concern than knowing what kind of film your work is going into and in what context the work will be shown. I won’t, for example, allow my work to be shown in any kind of brutal or gun-oriented movie. “Driving Miss Daisy” is more my kind of film.

Product placement is big business. Brewers pay big bucks to have stars slosh their brew. Automobiles, household furniture, even lamps and coffee table dingbats vie for your eye and are often sponsored.

I’m one of those guys who has some of his stuff listed with a prop rental company. So far I’ve turned down calls for my ‘69 E-Type Jaguar roadster. I just can’t see my girl in a deodorant commercial. I want her to be like the Ferrari in “Ferris Bueller’s Day Off”--the star of the show--with lots of low-angle lingering shots at sunset. My car is, after all, art.

I rued the day I rented myself and my 1921, 30ft open launch, Miss Reveller, to a Disney production. Changing the boat’s name to Ms. Ugli, they had me roar around in the pouring rain. The guy sitting beside me had dynamite strapped to his body. There were two storm-troopers with caulk boots and machine guns standing on the bow. When I got home, the $700 a day they paid me didn’t cover the refinishing of the mahogany deck. Never again.

Regarding rentals of art, most galleries carry the insurance for you. Make sure of this. While production companies tend to treat your stuff very well indeed, a couple of my paintings have come back with damaged frames. Also, make sure no blood is going to be spilled. Splashes of non-tomato-type fake blood are difficult to remove from the linen liners of frames. Besides, I really don’t think you want your work in that type of movie.

Best regards, Robert

Esoterica: This weekend we’re all at the Santa Barbara Film Festival for the premiere of the gentle and charming “Old Stock,” the first feature film directed by our son James. James used a couple of my paintings, as well as those of his sister, Sara. He got our stuff for free. The twins’ brother, Dave Genn, composed and directed the musical score. Dave got paid. As they say, nepotism is okay provided you keep it in the family. I offered myself as an actor at scale but was unfortunately rejected. I tried free but that also failed.

The Disaster Preparedness Handbook

by Arthur T. Bradley, PhD

Bradley works as a senior engineer for NASA and has volunteered in many organizations over the years. Being an Army veteran, father of four, martial arts expert and a homeschooler, he decided to write a book about common sense ways to survive our many natural disasters and to teach others how to protect themselves and their loved ones during a local, regional or national disaster. His research and thoughtful suggestions are helpful in learning how to get prepared and help our communities stay prepared for the common disasters and disruptions, such as tornadoes, to the extreme stuff like earthquakes and volcanic eruptions.

I found the book to be extremely well researched, well organized and helpful in assessing my situation and taking steps to get more prepared for the natural disasters that occur in Oklahoma. This is a good read for anyone desiring to learn more about civil defense and upgrading their awareness of how to help themselves and others when disaster strikes.
